Re: Smith et al. v. Intuit, Inc. Case No. 5:12-cv-00222 (N.N. Cal.)

RICHARD W. WIEKING
CLERK, U.S. DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

To Whom It May Concern:

I object to the above captioned lawsuit. That anyone should file suit against Intuit over a fee to use their service is a heinous misuse of our legal system and a prime example of the deterioration of personal accountability in this world.

Turbo Tax makes it perfectly clear that there are fees for electronic filing through their system. If one does not wish to pay said fees, they do not have to use the service, and can file with an accountant or by themselves. I in no way see anything wrong with this practice and in fact am happy to pay the fee so that I do not have to file myself, and even happier that they offer to take it out of my taxes rather than require a credit card.

In addition to my objection to the suit, I am excluding myself.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Joscelyn C Chapman
